How to Go from

"Missing" Dad to Hero!

Nearly Half of Dads Are Missing This Crucial Parenting Skill
The 'Dad Influence' Is Crucial to Your Child's Development.

According to a national PTA poll, nearly half (45%) of all dads fall short of their parental responsibilities. Dads, claiming job and outside the home responsibilities, are seriously limiting their family time. The results could be consequential.

National storyteller K. Sean Buvala says one simple solution is to engage your children through bedtime storytelling. "Storytelling, in all its forms, is important for building reading and math skills," says Buvala. "It's also an easy way to spend quality time with your children."

In the DaddyTeller™ Book, Sean Buvala reveals:

- Children spend over 4 hours a day in various unsupervised activities such as watching television and using the Internet.
- The average dad spends less than 30 minutes a day of focused time with their children.
- If you want your 14-year-old to talk with you, start telling them stories when they are 4.
- Storytelling increases literacy and makes learning a more creative process.
- A step-by-step, word-for-word, action-by-action guide for dads to tell (not read!) stories with their children. Eight stories are included in the book.
